

SNIFFEN & SPELLMAN, P.A.

Education Law Alert

April 2017

Title IX Claims Are Increasingly "Heightened Risk" and "Post-Reporting" Claims

A U.S. District Court Judge recently denied Baylor University's Motion to dismiss claims brought by several women alleging Baylor violated Title IX when it acted with deliberate indifference after the women reported they were victims of sexual assault.

The women allege that Baylor's indifference after they reported the incidents caused them further sexual assault and harassment or created a hostile educational environment. Baylor responded that the complaint does not allege plaintiffs informed the appropriate individuals of the assaults or that they were subjected to further harassment, and that Baylor's non-compliance of Department of Education regulatory guidance did not rise to the level of deliberate indifference. Accordingly, Baylor requested the Complaint be dismissed; the Judge rejected Baylor's arguments.

The plaintiffs also alleged that Baylor's handling of sexual assault reports created a heightened risk of sexual assault throughout the University. The court agreed that the plaintiffs had plead plausible claims and allowed them to move forward.

This case demonstrates that courts will allow expansively pled and diverse pleadings to remain in Title IX lawsuits.

Read more here.

Florida School Testing Bill Passed Final Senate Committee

SB 926 is aimed at reducing the number of standardized tests administered in Florida; it has passed its final Senate committee. The bill, proposed by Senator Anitere Flores, would require school districts to begin testing later in the year, eliminate requirements that high school students take four tests at the end of their courses, and allow students who achieve certain scores on college-entrance and national exams to skip some state tests.

The bill has been amended since being proposed and now includes other issues, such as school recess provisions which require elementary schools to give students 100 minutes of "free-play recess" each week. The bill also contains provisions dealing with excused absences for treatment of autism spectrum disorders, teacher bonus, and exemptions from physical education tests for varsity sports athletes.

Learn more about SB 926 here.

Education Secretary Hires Department Aides

On April 12, Education Secretary Betsy DeVos announced the hiring of nine senior staff members. Prior to the announcement, the Department of Education had gone almost three months without naming appointees to many positions.

James Manning was named acting under secretary and is the most senior official in the Department. He has lengthy experience with the Department dating back to the Carter administration. The Department also named such staffers as the Chief of Staff, Josh Venable, the Deputy Chiefs of Staff, and the White House Liaison, Jana Toner. The only position requiring Senate confirmation will be the Assistant secretary.

Read more here.

Ruling: Judge Dismisses NCAA Labor Lawsuit

On April 26, a California Federal District Court Judge dismissed a lawsuit claiming that the National Collegiate Athletic Association and Pac-12 Conference violated labor laws and owed money to plaintiff, a former Division I football player. The suit is of many aiming to redefine college athletes as employees who are entitled to compensation.

Judge Richard Seeborg relied on similar Seventh Circuit cases and found that “the long tradition of amateurism in college sports, by definition, shows that student athletes – like all amateur athletes – participate in their sports for reasons wholly unrelated to immediate compensation.”

Read the Order here.

The U.S. Department of Education Announced New Press Secretary

The U.S. Secretary of Education announced that Liz Hill will become the Education Department’s new press secretary. Before joining the Education Department, Ms. Hill served as the communications director for U.S. Representative Jeb Hensarling in Texas. Prior to that Ms. Hill was a television news reporter and news anchor.

Read more here.

From the lighter side: Man in “Drunk Lives Matter” Shirt Charged with Drunk Driving

Pennsylvania police arrested a man wearing a t-shirt advocating the politically charged message: “Drunk Lives Matter.” The political renegade had a blood-alcohol content of two and a half times Pennsylvania’s legal limit when he was pulled over.

Read the breaking press release here.